OWSER'S APPENDICITIS.

He Expects It to Come Along at Any

When Mr. Bowser awoke the other torning he heaved a long sigh. When he got out of bed he groaned. As he dressed himself he had laions of graveyards and weeping visions of graveyards and weep villows. When he came down stairs he When he came down stairs he intended to tell Mrs. Bowser that the end of thincs for him was near, but something happened to prevent. He saw her looking at him in an ironical way, and without the slightest note of pity. It cut him to the quick. She must know that he was sun'ering, and yet she could make game of him.

Mr. Bowser braced up like a bent bow springing back.

He took his seat at the table as its master should.

He ate with a dignity becoming a Bowser.

When he had finished the meal he rose and departed for the office without unbending. As he came home at the usual evening hour he sniffed and snuffed at the atmosphere of the hall and observed:
"I should say you had a boiled din-

"One of the best you ever ate," re-plied Mrs. Howser.
"That's very nice of you, I'm sure; but unfortunately for me, I cannot

"I got a little warning today that I think best to heed."
"What sort of warning?"

INCE IN TWO WEEKS, DURING OOD WEATHER?

"Dr. Macelready was in the office on some business, and hearing me utter an involuntary groan as I rose up, he began to question me. It wasn't five minutes before he announced that I would have to be very careful or fall a victim to appendicitis. He said I had all the symptoms of it."

"I don't believe any such talk. Mr. Bowser! I haven't heard you groan, involuntarily or otherwise, for a year. Did he charge you a fee for telling you this?"

you this?"
"He made no charge, but natur-

"Naturally you went and handed him over at least $5, while I am in need of a dozen different little things!

need of a dozen different little things!
You have no more cause to be afraid of appendicitis than I have of the Indian plague. Why do you let people work you like this?"
"Softly, now—softly," he said, as he led the way to the dining r.om instead of shouting "woman!" at her.
"Mrs. Bowser, I cannot be classed as an alarmist. Thousands of things have alled me, and I have never said a word to you about them. I wasn't going to say a thing in this case, but being put on a diet by the doctor. I had to make some explanations. I have known for months and months that the appendicitis was after me. I have figured that when it overtook me at last I would make a sneak for the hospital and have the operation performed before you knew anything shout It. That is the way with me and contained the some calomel. performed before you knew anything about it. That is the way with me.
I do my own worrying and planning."

"Well, what symptom have you felt?" she asked.

"Balancia the back rearing in the felt?" she asked.
"Pains in the back, roaring in the long."

"And this ass of a doctor made you believe those were symptoms of appendicitis?"

"I knew they were before he confirmed me. I have been saved by just one week."

"How?"

"I am going to follow the direction and water diet for the next doctor this morning to tell you to live on a milk and water diet for the next doctor.

"How?"

"I am going to follow the directions given me by the doctor."

"Did he tell you to sleep with your feet out of bed and breakfast, dine and sup on catnip?"

"No, ma'am, he didn't. He told me to live on milk and water for the next four days. That boiled dinner smells to heaven, but I can't touch a mouthfour days. That boiled dinner smells to heaven, but I can't touch a mouth-ful of it. It's either milk and water or death for me."

"Look here, now," she said, determined on one last argument, "I have known of as many as five cases of appendicitis right around here, and not one of them had the symptoms you mention. All that alls you is a little biliousness or rheumatism."

"I have got my warning, my dear."

"But you haven't got it from your own doctor."

"One doctor is the sam. as another, when it's a case as serious as this. I'm as hungry as a wolf, but don't tempt me. One full meal would mean the ambulance and the hospital. I might possibly come out alive, but the chances are only one in a hundred. I seem to be fat and solid, Mrs. Bowser, but as a matter of fact I am too spirituelle to stand much pain."

Mrs. Bowser had to laugh. She would have had to had he been standing over her with an ax. She led the way upstairs and was for dropping the subject, but Mr. Bowser hadn't had his say yet.

"In case this milk and water diet doesn't stave off appendicitis, and the results are fatal, you will find all my doesn't stave off appendicitis, and the results are fatal, you will find all my business papers in the safe." he observed as he walked up and down.

"You will not be forced to marry to keep a roof over your head." "No?"

"No?"

"Naturally, I would rather you would not marry at all, but I am not going to exact any promise. I do wish, however, that you would visit my grave once in a while. I shan't know it, of course, but it will help you not to forget me."

"I shall visit it once in two weeks during good weather," she replied, as she saw his lip trembling.

"That is all I ask. The doctor assured me that milk and water would stave off the impending danger, but I have a presentiment, Mrs. Bowser—a presentiment that appendicitis will come and terminate fatally."

"And I have a presentiment that I come and terminate fatally."

"And I have a presentiment that I shall some day meet that fool of a doctor and tell him what I think of him It's just biliousness that ails you, and a dose or two of calomel would set you to singing. There are yellow streaks under your eyes, and those mean biliousness and nothing else."

Mr. Bowser shook his head and heaved a sigh that finally terminated neaved a sign that finally terminated in a groan and brought the cat out from under the plano. Then he start-ed down the hall and put on his hat. "Are you going out?" she asked. "I'm going after a quart of milk. I

"Are you going out? she asked.

"I'm going after a quart of milk. I may wake up in the night and want a drink. I may also talk with the druggist if he isn't busy. I am sure he would help you about the funeral arrangements."

Mrs. Bowser was glad to have him go. She knew the druggist was a blunt-spoken man and would diagnose the case pretty speedily. She therefore ran into a neighbor's for an hour. Mr. Bowser made his way to the druggist's, and not finding him rushed, he began:

"Doc, take a careful look at my face, will you?"

"Cert. Thinking of trading it off for a new one?"

"Does my phiz tell you anything?"

"Not much. It never did. The yellow streaks under your eyes show that you are billious."

"What do pains in the back signify?"

"And roaring in the head?"

"And when your teeth seem too long?"

"A little neuralgia in the jaws. Why, what do you think alls you?"

"I was told by a doctor this morning that those symptoms heralded an attack of appendicitis."

"Herald your grandmother! Somebody has been making a fool of you again. You may have appendicitis some day, but it won't come on that way. What did the so-called doctor tell you to do?"

rains in the back, roaring in the head, wakefulness and all that. There are days when black specks dance before my eyes. The other morning when I got up my teeth seemed too long."

"Well, you saw the druggist?" she queried as he refilled his plate. "The druggist? What about?" "About your threatened appen-

"I hadn't heard anything about being threatened."

"But you gave up $5 to a fool of a doctor this morning to tell you to live on a milk and water diet for the next four days!"

"My dear woman," said Mr. Bowser between huge bites, "please go away. You are laboring under a hallucination. You have somehow got me mixed up with your Uncle Joe or your brother Sam. Go away while I get a few mouthfuls to eat!"—(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
